PREFACE.

THE Rolls upon which were entered the sums of money or other property[1], offered to the King by way of oblation or fine, for the enjoyment of honors, offices, lands, liberties, and privileges, were called the OBLATA or FINE ROLLS. OBLATA OR FINE ROLLS;

After the reign of King John, the first of those appellations fell into disuse, and the latter thenceforward was retained.

All the rolls of this description now extant belonging to the reign of King John are comprised in this volume[2]; viz., the OBLATA of the Reign of King John.

1 The Fines or Oblations offered to the crown consisted chiefly of gold and silver, in pounds or marks, of palfreys, warhorses, hunters, hariers and dogs of all sorts, falcons, hawks, &c.

2 The series of Fine Rolls terminates in the year 1641: —the portion preserved in the Tower begins with the reign of King John, and ends with that of King Edward IV. in 1483; the rest are deposited in the Rolls Chapel.

A selection of instruments from the Fine Rolls of Rolls of the first, second, and third years of that reign, and the Fine Rolls of the sixth, seventh, ninth, fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth years, upon the last of which a few entries of the eighteenth year are also recorded.

Nature of the Entries upon the Rolls of the reign of John;

During the reign of John the entries on the Oblata or Fine Rolls are, for the most part, mere notices of the oblations or fines offered[1]; but in subsequent reigns they are more comprehensive, containing not only memoranda similar to those occurring in this Volume, but also writs and ulterior proceedings connected with the object for which the Fine had been made; for instance, upon those of subsequent reigns.

Memoranda of Homage and Fealty, &c.

Memoranda of homage and fealty done, and reliefs paid by tenants in capite, and by their tenants, when the tenant in capite happened to be a minor.

the reign of Henry III. has lately been published, under the direction of the Commissioners for Public Records, in a work intituled, "Excerpta è Rotulis Finium in Turri Londinensi asservatis." The Editor of that Volume has made his selection with a view to remedy, in some measure, the loss of the Inquisitions post mortem of the reign of Henry III., and his work comprises almost every thing valuable on those rolls.

[1] Such as "Walter son of Godfrey offers to the lord the King fifty marks, to have the custody of the land and heir of Robert de Watleg."—"Richard Talamag and Robert de Anvers give to the lord the King ten marks, to have a writ of mort d'ancestor concerning two knight's fees."

Leases and temporary Grants.

Leases, and Grants of a temporary nature; such as the custody of counties, of honors, of vacant bishopricks, of religious establishments, of manors, lands, &c., and the guardianship of minors; that is to say, when any rent or service thereon was reserved to the crown.

Writs of various Kinds.

Writs of diem clausit extremum; Writs for the caption of lands, goods, and chattels into the King's hands upon the decease of tenants in capite, when the heir was a minor, or until he had sued out livery; Writs of general and special livery, of livery and partition, of livery post mortem patris et matris, of livery of tenants in capite, of livery of tenants by courtesy, of livery of tenants in dower, of livery of tenants in tail and tenants for life; Writs de probatione ætatis, de dote assignanda, de levari facias, de homagio respectuando; Writs to sheriffs to allow executors of wills to have free administration, after security given for the debts of the deceased to the crown[1]; and all writs of a fiscal nature, however remotely relating thereto; Writs for the elections of sheriffs and coroners.

[1] It was ordained by one of the articles in Magna Carta, that if any one holding a lay fee of the King die, and the sheriff or bailiff shall show the King's Letters Patent of Summons concerning a debt owed by the defunct to the King, it shall be lawful for the King's officer to attach and register all the goods and chattels

Appointments to Offices.

Appointments of escheators, officers of the customs, comptrollers, searchers, constables, wardens of the King's castles, towns, and demesnes, and of others who render their accounts at the Exchequer.

Commissions for collecting Taxes, &c.

Commissions for collecting taxes and subsidies, whether tenths, fifteenths, or other parliamentary imposts; also for collecting customs upon wine, wool, &c.

Notices of Matters affecting the Crown Revenue.

Notices of aids and scutage, and other matters affecting the crown revenue, of fines and amerciaments imposed in the courts of Chancery, King's Bench, and Common Pleas, before the justices in eyre, justices of the forests, and the King's commissioners.[1] of the deceased found on such lay fee to the amount of the debt; and that nothing shall be removed therefrom until the King's debt be paid, and the remainder was to be left to the executors to fulfil the will of the defunct.

[1] It was provided by the King in Council in the 43rd of Henry III., "that no escheator, commissioner, or justice, especially assigned to take any assizes, or to hear and determine any complaints, shall henceforth have authority to amerce for default of the common summons, except the justice or justices in eyre on their circuits."—*Rot. PARDONS granted of grace, for manslaughter and other transgressions, when the goods of the party pardoned were forfeited, &c. Pardons of Grace.

By the entries on the Fine Rolls it appears that a great source of wealth to the crown arose out of the receipt of Fines or Oblations, and must have constituted a considerable branch of the royal revenue, for no one solicited a favor of the King without a present. The sovereign's grace and good will were easily purchased; and his interference could be obtained even in case of conjugal infidelity[1] or of matrimonial rights.[2] Money was extorted from the subject to replenish the royal coffers on the most trivial pretences; and these records afford a painful but curious account of fines offered and amerciaments imposed in a variety of ways almost innumerable. Fines a Source of Revenue.

Fines were paid to procure grants and confirmations of liberties and franchises of markets, fairs, parks, and free warren; for exemptions from tolls, pontage, passage, and from murage; to obtain justice and right; to stop, delay, or expedite pleas, trials, and judg- Upon what Occasions Fines were paid.

ments[1]; and to remove suits and processes from inferior tribunals into the King's Court. Fines were also exacted for licence to trade, or permission to exercise commerce or industry of any kind, and to have the aid, protection, or goodwill of the King; to mitigate his anger or abate his displeasure; to be exempted from knighthood either for a term or for ever, and from attending the King in his foreign expeditions; they were also demanded for seisin or restitution of ancestral lands or chattels; for allowing delinquents to be replevied or bailed; for acquittal of murder; and for pardon of trespasses and misdemeanors; for the "year and a day" of the lands and goods of felons and fugitives: indeed no enjoyment, exemption, or privilege was too trifling to escape notice, or for which a fine was not required, in augmentation of the royal revenue.

[1] In process for the recovery of debts, the litigant sometimes offered half sometimes a third of the debt, to be paid when the same was recovered. Sometimes both parties concerned in the same matter made fine to obtain the same thing, such fines were called Concurrent Fines; but when the applications of parties were in direct opposition to each other, the fines then offered were denominated Counter Fines.

"Robert de Burun' offers one mark, to have licence to settle by agreement the difference between himself and Emma de Rybi, concerning four carucates of land in Ryby, upon which a great assize was summoned in the King's Court."

"Emma de Rybi offers to the lord the King one mark for the same."

In what Courts and before whom Fines were usually made.

OBLATIONS, or, as they are technically called, FINES, during the reigns of the first Anglo-Norman kings, were generally made in Curiâ Regis, before the justiciary and other officers of state.[1] After the separation of the Exchequer from that court they appear to have been made before the chancellor[2], until the final extinction of feudal service in the 12th year of the reign of King Charles the Second.

Account of Oblations in the Dialogus de Scaccario.

The account of oblations made to the King in the Dialogus de Scaccario, written by Richard Fitz Neal, Bishop of London, in the reign of Henry II., is worthy of perusal; and gives a more favorable idea of the clemency of the kings of the Norman race than has hitherto prevailed.

Oblata in rem and in spem.

Treating of oblations generally, he observes, "of the King's Oblata some are offered in rem, some in spem. They are said to be offered in rem when the oblation is accepted by the King, and he who offers it receives in consequence from the King that for which he made the oblation; as when any one having voluntarily offered a hundred pounds or a hundred marks to the King for any liberty, estate, wardship of a minor, or other thing which he deems conducive to his honor or advantage, is presented by the King with the object of his desire. Respecting those who have freely bound themselves, and, under an agreement with the Prince, are already in possession, our law decrees that they have the use and enjoyment of the benefices granted to them; but if they fail to answer to a summons for a debt to the King, they shall immediately forfeit what was granted to them: still, however, retaining the power of recovery by satisfying the debt within the same term of the exchequer. And observe, that every person, of whatever sex or condition, shall always be bound to this observance in voluntary oblations, viz., either to answer the summons, or lose what has been granted him, unless the King, in consideration of his past services, or his poverty, shall grant him any indulgence beyond the common rule; as when the King consents to accept a portion of a large oblation in any particular term, and notifies the same to his barons by his writ. They are said to be offered in spem when any one, for the purpose of obtaining justice, offers to the King any sum out of an estate or rent; this being done, not to obtain (for then you might say that justice was sold to him) but to quicken the administration of justice.[1] You are to justice, although he endeavours to throw a veil over it; but, however it may disguise the nature of such practices in his patron King Henry II., it must be admitted that neither of the sons of that monarch, nor his grandson and namesake, can be sheltered under it.

[1] Several instances occur in this Volume to prove the truth of this assertion:—

"Richard de Leicester offers to the King fifteen marks, to have the office in the town of Southwerk, which his ancestors had, &c. The oblation was not received, because Robert Fitz Ardewin offered one hundred marks for the same."

"Walter de Ridellesford offers to the King twenty marks, to have the King's confirmation of his lands, and for licence to hunt the hare and the wolf, also for having the writ "de rationabilibus divisis" between him and his neighbours. The oblation was not accepted, because the King suspected Walter's charter."

"The abbot of Selby offers to the King one hundred marks in silver and one palfrey, to have a confirmation of his charters. The King would not accept the offering, because he was unwilling to confirm unjust charters."

"Moses the Jew of Gloucester offers to the King twenty marks of silver, to be paid at reasonable terms, to have remittance of two hundred marks, which he owes, unless they be owing to the King for debt, tallage, forfeiture, or for some such cause, &c. The King would not accept the fine, because he would rather have the two hundred than the twenty marks from him."

"Vives, son of Aaron, a Jew of Lincoln, offers to the King ten marks, to have seisin of all the land of Ralph Lovell, &c. The King would not accept the offering, because it did not please him." for to some, out of charity or regard to their past services, he administers full justice gratuitously; while others, either on account of the high merits of those already in possession, or through their own ill-desert, having been guilty of some delinquency against the kingdom or the King himself, can neither by prayers nor oblations obtain their wishes. Concerning those, the King ordains that they are to pay no part of the oblation until they have had right, i. e., have obtained it by sentence, or by the cause having been adjudged against them are deprived of all hope; but in this case it may be sufficient to answer to the sheriff that they have not yet had right. It is the sheriff's duty to see that it is not the debtor's fault that the cause has not been brought to execution, as by not surrendering himself to justice, and thus artfully defrauding the King of his promised money; for if detected his deceit shall not avail him, but he shall be distrained in every respect as if he had obtained his right by sentence; and it is a proof of his wilful procrastination when he detains the King's writ in his possession without using it. The King, however, sometimes shows clemency to those who, after promising their money, have lost their cause, that, disappointed in their hopes by being deprived of their estate, they may not have an additional motive for regret."

FINES may be divided into two heads, involuntary and voluntary.

FINES.—Involuntary and Voluntary.

INVOLUNTARY FINES were those demanded by the King for aids, for reliefs, for alienations, and for scutage[1]; but they must not

Nature of INVOLUNTARY FINES.

[1] AIDS were generally mere benevolences granted by the tenant to his lord, in times of difficulty and distress ("Auxilia fiunt de gratia, et non de jure; cum dependeant ex gratia tenentium, et non ad voluntatem dominorum."—Bracton, l. 2. tr. 1. c. 16. s. 8.); but, in process of time, came to be considered as matter of right, and not of discretion. The Conqueror ordained that his tenants in capite should not be compelled to pay any thing beyond their stated services (L.L. Will. Conq. s. 55.), except a reasonable aid in ransom of his person, if taken prisoner (a necessary consequence of feudal attachment and fidelity); to make his eldest son a knight (a ceremony attended with great pomp and expence); and to marry his eldest daughter, by providing her with a suitable portion.

No exact definition of a reasonable aid had, however, been drawn, and therefore the demands of the crown were in some degree discretionary, until limited and ascertained by the statute 25 Edw. III. The 12th chapter in Magna Carta declares, indeed, that no aids shall be taken by the King, without consent of Parliament, and the 14th chapter, that aids taken by the King of his tenants in capite shall be settled by Parliament; still, as before said, they were not precisely defined till the statute 25 Edw. III., though the right of inferior lords had been settled by the first statute of Westm. 3 Edw. I. c. 36.

RELIEF. Upon the decease of a tenant in capite, if his heir had attained to the age of twenty-one years, the King demanded a fine or composition called a Relief, for the heir's taking up his inheritance ("quia hæreditas quæ jacens fuit per antecessoris decessum relevatur in manus hæredum et propter factam relevationem facienda erit ab hærede quædam præstatio, quæ dicitur relevium." —Bracton, 84. Fleta, l. 3. c. 17. s. 1.) This composition was at first arbitrary and uncertain, and sometimes so exorbitant as to effect an absolute disinheritance of the heir, of whom the King might require more than the value of his land, whereof he could neither have nor keep possession until such demands were complied with. The Conqueror, however, ordered a certain quantity of arms and habiliments of war to be contributed by earls, barons, and vavasours respectively, and, if the latter had no arms, that they should pay 100*s.*—(Leg. Guil. Conq., Wilkins, p. 233.) But his son and successor, William Rufus, deviated from that regulation, and again demanded arbitrary and uncertain relief. Henry I. restored the law of his father, and ordained "quod hæres non redimet terram suam sicut faciebat tempore fratris mei, sed legitima et justa relevatione relevabit eam."—(Text. Roffens. c. 34.) Henry II., however, in consequence of an ordinance made in the 27th year of his reign, which provided that every man's armour should descend to his heir, for defence of the realm, and thereby rendering it impracticable to pay relief in arms, settled the sum at 100*s.* for every knight's fee; but it is stated in the Dialogus de Scaccario (lib. 2. cc. 10 & 24), that different sums were paid to the King for relief, according to the different conditions of the persons from whom it was required; the heirs of great or small baronies, holding of the King in capite lands belonging to the crown, not paying according to the settled sum, but whatever was demanded by the King; and if the land or bishoprick were in the King's hands, 100*s.* were then to be paid for a single knight's fee, and so on, according to the number of knight's fees descending to the heir, who otherwise lost his estate; for a son's inheriting by right of succession excluded him from the law of voluntary oblations, "Sunt autem qui credant eos qui in releviis Regi tenentur, nec summoniti solvunt, spontaneorum oblatorum legibus obnoxios; ut cum solvendo non fuerint, careant impetratis; at verius dici potest, ut sicut de pecuniariis pœnis fit sic fiat de releviis; debita namque filios ratione successionis hæreditas a lege sponte oblatorum videtur excludere."

ALIENATIONS. Fines for alienation were also involuntary, as, whenever a tenant in capite had occasion to make over his land to another, a fine was demanded for licence to do so, otherwise, in ancient strictness, it was an absolute forfeiture.

SCUTAGE was a pecuniary assessment levied upon every knight's fee of tenants in capite, arising out of the King's right to require in war the personal attendance of his tenants who held their lands by knight's service, which being found troublesome and often inconvenient, the tenants found means of compounding for it, either by sending some one in their stead, or more usually by paying a sum of money, called Scutage, which practice became so general that personal attendance fell into total desuetude, and scutages were arbitrarily levied whenever the King went to war, — a part of the royal prerogative open to so much abuse, that King John was obliged to consent to the insertion of that article in Magna Carta, "Nullum scutagium ponatur in regno nostro, nisi per commune concilium regni nostri." This clause, however, was afterwards omitted in the Great Charter of Henry III., where it was ordained that scutage should be taken, as it was wont to be in the time of Henry II., that is, in a reasonable and moderate manner. By the statute of 25 Edw. I. cc. 5 & 6, and by other subsequent statutes, it was provided that scutage should only be taken with the common assent of the realm. Scutage or escuage is thus defined in the Dialogus de Scaccario, lib. I. c. 9. "It often happens, upon the expectation of an invasion or insurrection, that the King orders a certain sum of money (as a mark or a pound) to be paid out of every knight's fee, by which the soldiers' wages are raised, for the prince prefers that hirelings, rather than his own countrymen and subjects, should be exposed to the chance of war. This sum, because it is paid as shield money, is called Scutage."

[1] There is another sense in which the word Fine is used, and which often confuses persons not well acquainted with the nature of records. An acknowledgment of a feoffment on record is called a Fine, that is, a final concord or amicable agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, whereby lands are acknowledged to be the right of one of the parties. Glanville (lib. 8. c. 1.), treating of final concords, observes, that pleas moved in the King's court are determined by an amicable composition and final concord, made with the consent of the King or his justices, reduced into writing, with the general consent of the parties interested. He afterwards observes, that such concord is termed final, because it puts an end to the matter, so that neither of the litigating parties can ever after recede from it.

In a plea in Parliament between Margery de Mose, wife of Thomas de Weyland, and the earl of Gloucester, concerning the manor of Sobbirs, &c. these words occur in relation to the passing of a fine:

" Nec in regno isto provideatur vel sit aliqua securitas major seu solempnior per quam aliquis vel aliqua statum certiorem habere possit, vel ad statum suum verificandum aliquid solempnius testimonium producere, quam finem in curia domini Regis levatum; qui quidem finis sic vocatur, eo quod finis et consummatio omnium placitorum esse debet, et hac de causa providebatur, &c." Placita in Parliamento in Turr. Lond. 19 Edw. I. n° 1.

The levying of a fine is a fictitious process, and passes through five stages before it is completed:—

1. The party to whom the land is to be assured sues out a writ of covenant against the other for the property in question; the suit having thus commenced,

2. Both parties appear, and the defendant applies to the court for leave to agree to the suit, which is granted; upon which
3. A concord or composition of the suit follows, which is the acknowledgment that the lands in question are the right of the complainant; then comes
4. The note of the fine, which is an abstract of the writ of covenant, and the concord; and, lastly,
5. The foot or conclusion of the fine, reciting the whole matter, naming the parties, day, year, and place, and the justices before whom it was levied.

The meaning of the technical phrase "Foot of a Fine"—PES FINIS—appears to be involved in some obscurity which no author with whose works the Editor is acquainted has attempted to explain. The fact was probably this: when an agreement was made between parties it was usual, formerly, to write both parts on the same piece of parchment with the word CHIROGRAPHUM or some other word between them, through which the parchment was cut horizontally, either in a straight or indented line, in such a manner as to leave the word divided into two parts. That portion containing the upper part of the word was given as a title deed to the complainant, and the lower part or foot of the word was preserved as a record of the fact by the court.

For the formulæ of final concords consult Madox, Formulare Anglicanum, p. 217 to 237.

[1] Amerciamentum and Misericordia, both signifying Amerciament, are frequently confounded with each other. The difference between them appears to be this, the AMERCIAMENTUM was a certain fine or pecuniary crime or trespass[1]; the Oblation Fine a free offering for privilege. Madox, however, remarks, that "in ancient times amerciaments are hardly to be distinguished from fines by a nice observer."[2] The author of the Dialogue concerning the Exchequer says[3], "We call the pecuniary penalties to which offenders are liable "placita," but voluntary oblations agreements." Most crimes were then atoned for by money, and the fines im-mulct set upon an offender, the MISERICORDIA an undetermined fine, — or rather Misericordia was the liability of the offender to be mulcted, being at the mercy of the King; Amerciamentum the penalty inflicted, for example:

"Thomas de Columbiers rendered his account at the exchequer of sixty marks and a penny "pro misericordia" into which he fell before the King's justices at Guildford, and therefore "amerciatus fuit" at 100*l.*" Again, King Henry III., in the third year of his reign, commanded his justices in eyre in the county of Kent, "quod omnes illos qui coram vobis inciderint in misericordia de communibus loquelis amercietis." When the Misericordia was reduced to a certain sum, it was said to be admeasured or affered.

[1] Fines or amerciaments for crimes and misdemeanors were anciently one of the great branches of the King's revenue. Amerciaments were imposed by the sheriffs, who, at that time, generally farmed the King's revenue, and were frequently guilty of great enormities in perverting justice, either for the purpose of filling the King's coffers or their own.

[2] Madox, Hist. Excheq. c. xiv.

posed having no express limitation, sometimes occasioned the ruin of persons whose trespasses were but slight. Amerciaments.

Amerciaments in criminal and civil causes may be reduced to the following heads:—Amerciaments for murder and manslaughter, for disseisins, for recreancy, for breach of assize, for defaults, for nonappearance, for false judgment, for not doing suit and service, for not making hue and cry, and for trespasses of every kind.

Examples of Amerciaments.

A few instances will show the nature of the amerciaments which were entered upon the Fine Rolls.

Walter de Marton gives three palfreys instead of the amerciament which he incurred for marrying Matilda the widow of Martin de Kanewic, who was in the King's donation by reason of her dowry.

Adam de St. Mary was amerced half a mark for default.

Robert Coberim was amerced five marks for making a false claim.

Robert le Briton was amerced one mark for disseising Emma the wife of the miller.

Richard de Certeden was amerced one mark for a ditch and house unjustly thrown down.

Alard de Westol was amerced half a mark for a trespass.

AMERCIAMENTS.

Richard de Muncland was amerced half a mark pro stultiloquio.[1]

The county of Cambridge was amerced one hundred pounds for a false judgment.

Ralph de Aure was amerced forty shillings, because he first denied what he afterwards acknowledged.

Nature of VOLUNTARY FINES or OBLATIONS.

VOLUNTARY FINES or OBLATIONS.—Having described the nature of INVOLUNTARY FINES and AMERCIAMENT FINES, it is now necessary to explain that of VOLUNTARY FINES or OBLATIONS.

OBLATIONS, as the word imports, were voluntary proffers of money or an equivalent to the King, for the enjoyment of some liberty or privilege, in which sense it also included the word Fine.

Divisible into Three Classes.

They may be reduced into three divisions:—

I. FINES FOR GRANTS AND CONFIRMATIONS OF LIBERTIES AND FRANCHISES.

II. FINES FOR LAW PROCEEDINGS.

III. MISCELLANEOUS FINES.

[1] The fine pro stultiloquio was paid by the pleader, and not by the client. Sir Edward Coke, in his preface to the Book of Entries, observes, upon a record of the reign of Henry III., which he cites, "quod inter alia acta publica evincit manifeste juridicum ea tempestate, non clientem mulctatum fuisse; iniquum enim censebatur clientem pœnas luere pro delicto jureconsulti, quod sane nihil aliud fuisset quam in miserum cumulasse miseriam."

OBLATIONS.

The entries on these rolls consist principally of voluntary Fines; and a selection, under each of the above divisions, will at once explain their nature, and show in what way these records elucidate the ancient laws, usages, and manners of the times to which they refer.

I. Fines for Grants and Confirmations of Liberties and Franchises.

I. Fines for Grants and Confirmations of Liberties and Franchises.

Many fines were paid for grants and confirmations of liberties, franchises, and immunities; and though the entries on the rolls are limited to mere memoranda, (stating that such and such parties paid sums of money to enjoy certain liberties,) yet they supply information no where else to be obtained, for upon investigation it has been found, that several fines were paid for grants not afterwards enrolled. The following are examples:

The citizens of Lincoln offer to the lord the King 300 marks to have the city of Lincoln at farm, as they had in the time of King Richard, and for having the King's confirmation of that farm, &c.

The abbot of Dore offers to the lord the King £333 6*s.* 8*d.* that he may freely and quietly essart, till, and cultivate according to his good pleasure 300 acres of land in the King's forest of Trivel, whereof he firs made fine to King Richard, but paid nothing thereof; and that he may be quit of waste and regard of the foresters, as well as from all secular services and actions; also that he may have the King's charter and confirmation thereof.

OBLATIONS.

I. Fines for Grants and Confirmations of Liberties and Franchises.

Henry de Waleton offers to the lord the King 100*s.* for thirty solidats of land in Chesterton with their appurtenances, which King Henry, father of the King (John), gave to Walter de Waleton his grandfather, who had a charter thereof, because his house was burnt whilst King Henry, the King's father, was entertained there.

The citizens of London offer 3,000 marks to the King for his confirmation of their liberties; and the charter is delivered to Geoffrey Fitz Peter, to this intent; that if they are willing to give the 3,000 marks, they are to have their charter, otherwise they are not to have it.

The citizens of Gloucester offer to the King 200 marks to have the same liberties as those enjoyed by the citizens of Winchester.

The abbot of Whitby offers to the lord the King 100 marks that the burgesses of Whitby may not enjoy the liberties granted to them by the abbot and convent of Whitby, and confirmed by the King's charter, until it be ascertained whether the abbot and convent were able to grant such liberties to them.

Hugh de Morevill offers to the lord the King 15 marks and three good palfreys, that he may hold a court of certain liberties, viz., toll, theam, infangthief, gallows, judgment by fire and water, and all other liberties, except those pertaining to the crown, so long as his wife Heloise shall continue unprofessed.

The burgesses of Devizes offer the King 12 marks and one palfrey for a confirmation of their charters of liberties, granted them by King Henry II. and the lady (Maud) the Empress.

The nuns of Carrow offer to the lord the King one sparrowhawk to have in their charter the words, "with all liberties and free customs to free fairs belonging," where it was before, "to the like fairs pertaining."

II. Fines for Law Proceedings.

Of all the fines made to the crown, those interfering with the proceedings of the courts of law and the due course of justice were perhaps the most grievous. It is painful to reflect that men were formerly obliged to purchase justice, and that their suits were expedited, delayed, and even arrested, to the prejudice of those who did not choose, or who could not pay a higher fine to have them speeded; and that the fourth, third, or half of a just debt was offered to the King to obtain the remainder. The abuses and oppressions arising out of these profits so dishonorable to the crown may be readily conceived. They were, however, considerably diminished, and in many instances destroyed, by the memorable clause in the Great Charter, which declared, "Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum vel justiciam." That it did not, however, entirely eradicate the evils resulting from the payment of fines for law proceedings, &c. is evident from various petitions to the King in Council complaining of the practice.[1]

William de Cressy offers to the lord the King 20 marks and one palfrey, that he may be sued justly, and according to the custom of England, for the dower which Cecilia daughter of Gervaise de Clifton claims against him. And the sheriff of Nottingham is commanded to allow him to be sued justly, and according to the custom of England, and he is not to sue him otherwise than by the law and custom of the kingdom of England.

William de Moubray offers to the lord the King 2,000 marks that the King will cause him to be sued justly, and according to the custom of England, in the imparlance between him and William de Stutevill. And he has placed the whole of his fee in pledge, until he can find sufficient security to the King for the money; a third part of which is to be paid at Easter, one third at Michaelmas, and the other at the Easter following, unless he be able to obtain other terms from the King.

Walter de Nevill, clerk, offers 40 marks and two palfreys to the lord the King, not to hinder him from acting freely against John de Alençon concerning the church of Ditton, and in recovering his right.

William de Winequique offers to the lord the King ten marks and two palfreys to have thirty acres of land, with their appurtenances, in Thorinton, William de Brayouse offers to the lord the King £100 sterling to have the record and reasonable judgment of the imparlance between him and Henry de Nonant concerning Totness; and the imparlance is to be before the King on the morrow of the close of Easter, wheresoever the King shall be; so that if he shall lose his cause he will nevertheless give the £100, but if he shall gain it he will give the King 700 marks of silver.

Brian de Foulard offers 200 marks to the King to have seisin of his land, whereof he was disseised on account of his not standing his trial on an appeal, of which he was arraigned, because, owing to the King's service, he did not dare to appear.

Ely Croc offers to the lord the King 30 marks and one palfrey, to have an inquisition concerning one knight's fee in Eston; viz., whether Mathew Croc, his father, held that fee in his demesne of the King in capite; and to have the judgment of the King's court, whether his father could give that fee in heritage to his younger brother, uncle of the said Ely, since that fee is chief of the honor or the caput baroniæ.

The lord bishop of Bath offers to the lord the King one golden ring with a ruby, that the plea between him and Mathew de Clivedon, and Richard de Cau, concerning the land of Cau, may be respited, until the King shall come to England. The King received the ring.

Pain de Trubleville offers to the lord the King one destrier, that the plea between him and Walter de Sully, concerning the land of Coitif, may be respited until the King shall come to England.

Walter de Sully offers to the lord the King 20 marks, and one horse worth 20 marks, to have right concerning one knight's fee in Coytif against Pain de Trubleville, and that the plea be summoned in the great court, and not impeded by the King.

5. Fines payable out of Debts when recovered.

Simon de Duai offers to the lord the King 20 marks of the 40 marks which he says are due to him from the bishop of Bath, that the said bishop may be distrained to render unto him the said 40 marks, which he can prove to be justly owing to him.

The justiciary of England is, commanded, if he can obtain security for the 20 marks, to cause the bishop to be distrained therefor.

John de Lideford offers to the lord the King the third part of 300 marks due to him from William de Vernon earl of Lisle, so that the same earl William may be justly distrained to render the 300 marks, which he (John de Lideford) can prove to be justly owing to him.

Nicholas Moresley offers to the lord the King two-thirds of 2,000 marks, which the countess of Flanders, daughter of the King of Portugal, and her men of Lisle took away from him in Flanders,

The fines made to the King to obtain the wardship of those young persons who came under the denomination of his infants, and for the right of disposing of them in marriage, were very numerous; for, at that period, if the heir male of a tenant in capite[1] were under the age of twenty-one, or an heiress were under that of fourteen, the King had the power of selling and transferring their wardships, and the purchaser took custody of body, lands, and goods, without any obligation to render an account of the profits. Moreover, the King could tender to his ward a suitable match, which if the ward refused he forfeited the value of that marriage to the King; that is to say, as much as any one would offer for such an alliance; and if the ward married without his guardian's consent, the latter was, by the statute of Merton, entitled to double the value of such marriage as a forfeiture.[1]

A sale of this nature being thus a most valuable perquisite was generally regulated according to the value of the heritage[2]; the King was frequently exorbitant in his demands, and kept possession till the highest bidder could be found; and in more than one instance, after the sale to one man had been arranged, a larger offering by some other

The law, as laid down by Glanville, is fully corroborated by the entries on the Fine Rolls respecting the lord's consent being requisite for the marriage of his widow tenants; for instance, we find that "Alice, countess of Warwick, gives £1,000 and ten palfreys, that she may remain a widow as long as she pleases, and that the King shall not compel her to marry; and if she should wish to marry, yet she will not but with the assent and pleasure of the King." Again, "Margaret de Lucy gives to the lord the King 40 marks to have entire the reasonable dower which belongs to her of the land which belonged to Robert de Lucy, formerly her husband, and to have the land which is of her right and inheritance, and that she may remain a widow as long as she pleases, but that if she wishes to marry she will obtain the assent of the King and of Geoffrey de Lucy, &c." "Amabill, who was the wife of Hugh Bardolf, gives to the lord the King 2,000 marks and five palfreys not to be compelled to marry, but that she may remain a widow as long as she pleases, and if she should wish to marry yet she will not without the King's will and assent."

Gerold de Canvill offers to the lord the King £1,000 to have the wife of Thomas de Verdon in marriage for his son, together with her land. The terms are £300 to be paid immediately; and concerning the remainder the King is to be consulted.

Roger de Stanford offers to the lord the King 40 marks to have to wife Cecilia, daughter of Isabel de Sautresdun, together with her inheritance which she claims in the King's court, if she shall be able to obtain the same inheritance; on such condition, however, that if she fail to gain her inheritance he shall not be bound to pay the said money.

William Lespec offers to the lord the King 40 marks and one good hawk to obtain his wife's sister, with the inheritance which belongs to her.

Roger, son of Geoffrey de Badley, offers to the lord the King 10 marks of silver to have the King's letters of entreaty addressed to the sheriff of Kent, concerning his having his niece to wife, the daughter of Ralph de Cornhull.

Matilda, who was the wife of Roger de Sumervill, offers to the lord the King 10 marks and one palfrey not to be constrained to marry, since she holds nothing of the King, or of the earl of Chester, who has given her to William de Chacumb.

Sir William Blackstone, alluding to the right of guardians to dispose of the marriage of their male wards, supposes that right to have arisen subsequently to the Great Charter of King Henry the Third, the sixth clause of which stands thus, "hæredes maritentur absque disparagatione," "meaning certainly," says Sir William, "by hæredes, heirs female, as there are no traces before this to be found of the lord's claiming the marriage of heirs male, and as Glanville expressly confines it to heirs female.[1] But the King and his great lords thenceforward took a handle (from the ambiguity of this expression hæredes) to claim both "sive sit masculus sive fæmina," as Bracton more than once expresses it."

The following instances, taken from this work and the other records of the reign of King John lately printed, show, however, that Blackstone entertained an erroneous opinion on this point, for they prove that fines had been made to the King by various persons to obtain the marriage of his male tenants in capite, and that the encroachment of guardians upon the rights of their male wards had commenced antecedently even to the Great Charter of King John; it is, however, true that the instances of the marriage of male wards being granted and sold are but few in proportion to those of female wards.

The King to the sheriff of Essex, &c. Know ye, that we have given and granted to our faithful John de Bassingburn the custody and marriage of the son and heir of Bartholomew de Brienton to the use of his daughter, with all the land and appurtenances of the said Bartholomew in your bailiwick, &c. (Rot. Claus. p. 41.)

Henry de Redeman offers 40 marks to have the custody of the land and heir of Roger de Hedon, and to have the marriage of the same heir to the use of his daughter, &c.

Richard le Flemeng offers 600 marks and six palfreys to have the custody of the land and heirs of Richard de Greinville until the said heirs be of the age when they may and ought to hold land according to the custom of England, and to have the marriage of the same heirs and of Gundreda their mother, the widow of the said Richard de Greinville, so that when he wishes to marry them he inform the King thereof, that it may be done with his assent. And if the sons and heirs of the said Richard de Greinville shall die before they be of age, the lord the King has granted to the said Richard le Flemeng the custody of the daughters of the aforesaid Richard de Greinville, with their lands and also their marriage, to have in the same manner as aforesaid. And if the said Richard le Flemeng shall die within the aforesaid term, or shall enter the cloister, the lord the King has granted that his sons Richard, William, Henry, and Lawrence, or any three, two, or one of them, if any shall happen to die, shall have the aforesaid custody, with the aforesaid marriages, in the same manner as before is said, &c.

The King to the sheriff of Warwickshire and Leicestershire, &c. Know ye, that we have granted to Thomas Basset the custody of the land and honor of the earl of Warwick, and the marriage of the heir to the use of one of his daughters. (Rot. Claus. p. 35.)

The King to Hugh de Chaworth, &c. Know ye, that we have granted to Thomas Basset the marriage of the son and heir of Walerand earl of Warwick, with the whole of his right, to the use of his daughter, &c. (Rot. Claus. p. 36.)

The King to the barons of the exchequer, &c. Account to Thomas Basset in 50 marks, which he paid into our chamber on the 23d day of October, of the fine which he made to us for marrying his daughter to the son of the earl of Warwick, &c. (Rot. Claus. p. 55.)

John, by the grace of God, &c. Know ye, that we have given and granted, and by this our charter have confirmed, to our beloved and faithful Robert de Turnham the custody of the land and heirs of Robert de Mesnille which he held of the archbishop of Canterbury, to have and to hold until those heirs be of such age as they may and ought, according to the custom of England, to hold lands. We have granted also to him the marriage of the same heirs, so that he may marry them to his nearest kin, viz., to his grandsons or his grand-daughters, &c. (Rot. Chart. p. 173.)

OBLATIONS.

III. Miscellaneous Fines.

2. Relating to Marriage.—cont.

Gundreda, who was the wife of Geoffrey Huse, offers to the lord the King 200 marks to have the custody of Geoffrey his son and heir, with all his land, until he be of such age that he may and ought to hold land, and that she may dispose in marriage of the same Geoffrey with the advice of his kindred and friends.

Memorandum that Hugh de Neville offers to the lord the King thirty marks for a certain marriage for the use of his grand-daughter, and if any one is willing to give more for that wardship than the aforesaid Hugh de Neville, let such person have it, unless Hugh de Neville is willing to give the same for it.

3. Fines for Leave to trade.

Fines relating to trade, and to the customs and duties on merchandizes imported or exported, are not numerous on the rolls of the reign of King John, nor do those which occur appear to have been excessive or an incumbrance upon traffic.

Robert Fitz Sunnolf offers to the lord the King two hawks for licence to import one ship-load of corn into Norway.

Nicholas le Dane offers to the lord the King one hawk every time he comes into England for the King's letters patent of protection, and that he may traffic throughout the King's dominions quit of all customs pertaining to the King, &c.

Alexander de Warham offers two tonels of wine for a licence to take a ship from England into Normandy laden with salt and skins, &c.

Alexander Oylard of Caen offers 25 marks, that he, or one of his three nephews, Henry, William, and Richard for him, may come safely into England and traffic with 200 marks of merchandize throughout the whole of the King's dominions for one year, paying the right and due customs.

Simon, son of Ralph de Leicester, offers 5 marks for a licence to bring five frails of waide from St. Walerick once within the week of Pentecost, paying the right and due customs.

John de Belvac offers to the lord the King 20 marks for a licence to take his ship from London whenever he pleases with the underwritten things; viz., 100 flitches of bacon, 28 gammons of bacon, one tun of honey, one last of herrings, one tun of graspois, seven lasts of skins, 22 sacks of wool, four pieces of scarlet, and ten pieces of Stamford cloth.

4. Fines for Licences.

Geoffrey de Luvein offers to the lord the King 400 marks to have the land and widow of Ralph de Cornhull, unless she can show reason why she ought not to accept him.

William de Wode offers to the lord the King 10 marks of silver to have the King's confirmation of licence to construct freely, and without hindrance, a windmill in his free tenement of Wode; and that he and his possessions may be under the King's protection; and that he may not be drawn into plea for any tenement which he holds, except before the lord the King or his chief justiciary.

Richard Gillemichel offers to the lord the King 66 marks 2*s.* 3*d.* for licence to agree upon an appeal made against him by Owen Brun for the death of his father.

Thomas Fitz William Fitz William, Fitz John de Harpertre, offers to the lord the King 100 marks to have licence to agree with Symon, son of John Monk, who had appealed against the said Thomas, William, his father, William de Wideword, William Boscher, Robert Fitz Yvon, Humphrey de Coldwell, Gervase of Kent, Robert Fitz Warin, Robert Fitz Gervase, and Elyas Fitz Runild, for the death of the same John Monk; and they are agreed thereon.

OBLATIONS.

III. Miscellaneous Fines.

4. For Licences.—cont.

5. Fines for the King's Favor.

Considerable sums of money were paid to obtain the favor of the King, and to induce him to mitigate or remit his anger and displeasure. The most enormous payment perhaps ever made upon such occasions was given by the citizens of London to King Henry III. to obtain that monarch's goodwill. No less a sum than twenty thousand marks[1], more than equivalent, in those days, to two hundred thousand pounds in these, was paid by them. The occasion of this high fine was the active part which the mutinous populace of London took in the civil wars and commotions that distracted the kingdom during the disaffection of the earls of Leicester and Gloucester, between the years 1264 and 1270.

Henry Tirel offers to the lord the King 30 marks to have the King's goodwill.

William de Kaaignes offers to the lord the King 100 marks to obtain his goodwill; and he has undertaken to deliver up to the King Warin and Werbes, his men, who have forfeited to him.

Peter, son of William de Derby, offers to the lord the King 40 marks and one palfrey, to be paid on summons of the exchequer, to have the King's goodwill, and for remission of what he was said to have forfeited in the King's forest; and the sheriff is commanded to acquit him thereof, and to restore to him his wife and children who have been taken on this account, and also his chattels.

Simon Fitz Walter makes fine with the King in 100 marks and his destrier to have the King's grace and goodwill, and that the King may abate all his ire and rancour which he entertains towards him, because he confederated with the barons, the King's enemies; and for security of that fine he gives as hostages to the King Matilda his daughter, until he shall deliver his eldest son in her stead, and Thomas de Karro, son of Walter de Karro, whom he has in custody by the King's gift.

Ralph de Bolebec offers to the lord the King 200 marks and two palfreys to have the King's goodwill; and if any one wishes to accuse him, that he may stand trial in the King's court, and make good what he asserted concerning the malefactors of the forest, and state whatever he has further knowledge of. He has acquittance of the palfreys, because he delivered them to Robert de Oldbridge.

Alan de Thorinton, forester, offers to the lord the King 100 marks to have the King's goodwill, who was displeased with him, because of the ill keeping of his forest.

Alan Boye offers 300 marks, besides the 20 marks which he before promised, for power to stand trial in the King's court, to have the King's goodwill, and to have his bailiwick of the forest as he had it before, and to have seisin of his land which was seized on this account; and the same Alan is committed to the custody of William de Stutevill, with his land and chattels, until he shall have found sure pledges to the same William for the payment of that money at the appointed terms, as also for the safe and faithful keeping of his bailiwick.

The burghers of York offer to the lord the King £100 to have the King's goodwill, on account of their not meeting the King on his entry into York, and to have pardon for not entertaining the King's bowmen; and to have quittance of the hostages which the lord the King required of them for the King's pleasure.

Walter de Fellinton offers to the lord the King 200 marks and 20 marks to have the King's goodwill concerning the wife whom he has married, and to have that part of her father's lands which rightfully belongs to her.

6. Fines for the King's Aid and Protection.

Robert de Amnolvesdale offers to the lord the King 5 marks to have a writ of protection, that he may not be put in plea for any of his tenements, unless before the lord the King, or by writ of the lord the King; and to be free from suits of shires and hundreds, and all pleas and complaints, except of murder, and robbery, and other things which belong to the King's crown.

The abbot of Whitby offers to the lord the King 10 marks to have the King's protection, that he may not be put in plea for any thing pertaining to himself or his monastery which he holds of the King in capite.

OBLATIONS.

III. Miscellaneous Fines.

6. For the King's Aid and Protection.—cont.

Geoffrey de Nevill offers to the lord the King one palfrey to have the King's aid in making a moderate fine with those Jews to whom he is indebted, and to be free from the Jews' usuries so long as he shall be in the King's service.

Roger de Kivilli offers to the lord the King 10 bezants to have letters patent of protection, that he may go, return, and transact business in all parts of Ireland without molestation or disturbance; and if any one shall injure him or his property, that the justiciary of Ireland shall give him redress therein.

The prior and monks of Norwich offer to the lord the King two palfreys to have protection and privilege from being placed in plea, except before the King or his chief justiciary.

The prior and monks of St. Swithin offer to the lord the King two palfreys for the same.

The dean and chapter of London offer to the lord the King two palfreys for protection against disturbance of the liberties of their charters.

The provost and monks of Beverley offer to the lord the King one mark of gold and one palfrey to have the King's letters of simple protection. Robert de Turnham is pledge.

The abbot of Holmcoltram offers to the lord the King two palfreys to have two protections of acquittance from toll, pontage, and passage, and all customs on every thing which they shall buy or sell for their own use in England and Ireland.

7. Fines for the King's Mediation.

Andrew Neulun of London offers "three cloaks of Flanders, for wet weather," to have the King's petition to the prior of Chicksand to hold the agreement made between them.

OBLATIONS.

III. Miscellaneous Fines.

7. For the King's Mediation.—cont.

Robert de Tateshall offers to the lord the King 20 marks to have the King's intercession with Bartholomew de Muleton concerning the marriage of the son and heir of Lambert son of Toli de Ybetofton, who is in the custody of the same Bartholomew, and not of the King's donation: the money to be rendered if the marriage takes place.

Roger, son of Nichol, offers to the lord the King all the lampreys he can take to have the King's request of William earl mareschal that he will grant to him the manor of Langeford at farm.

8. Fines for Seisin.

Fobert de Dovor offers to the lord the King 400 marks to have seisin of the castle and town of Chilham, so that he stand trial thereupon in the King's court, if the lord the King or any other shall claim right in the castle or town aforesaid.

William de Boterell offers to the lord the King 300 marks and two destriers to have seisin of land in Cornwall, viz., Penhell with appurtenances, and half the town of Alcester; and to have confirmation of the charter of Reginald earl of Cornwall, which he has concerning the same land.

William Turpin offers to the lord the King 40 marks, to be paid on summons of the exchequer, to have seisin of all the lands, offices, purchases, and gains whereof he was disseised by will of King Richard. Witness, William Mareschal, and pledge therein.

Henry, son of Hugh de Neville, offers to the lord the King 100 marks, to have seisin of the land whereof his father was disseised on the day of his death, whose nearest heir he is, and for his relief.

Philippa, who was the wife of Robert Briton, offers to the lord the King £100 to have such seisin of

OBLATIONS.

III. Miscellaneous Fines.

8. For Seisin.— cont.

the lands of Robert her husband, as the same Robert had on the day when King Richard put him in prison.

Henry de Mallor offers to the lord the King 50 marks of silver, to have full seisin of all the lands which Anketill Mallor his father lost in the service of King Henry, father of the lord the King.

Lesiard de Musters offers to the lord the King 40*s.* to have seisin of twelve ox-gangs of land and three quarters in Legerton and in Cotes, as it was reasonably adjudged to him in the King's court, when he was earl; whereof he was afterwards unjustly and without trial disseised by the bailiff of the same earl; and whereof Roger de Chapel dispossessed him; so that he shall answer to any one who shall claim it against him.

Robert Ap Maddoc offers to the lord the King 15 marks to have seisin of the lands which his father, who has lately taken the religious habit, held by hereditary right on the day he assumed such habit; saving the lord's services and reliefs, and saving the claims of all. And the sheriff is commanded to take surety.

Thomas Fitz Richard and Alice his wife offer to the lord the King 60 marks, which they before offered to the lord the King, then earl of Moreton, to have seisin of all the land with its appurtenances, in Marston and in Kingeston, whereof Geoffrey de Bella Aqua, father of the same Alice, was seised on the day of his death, and themselves after him, until William earl of Salisbury unjustly and without judgment disseised them; and the same 60 marks remained to be paid on account of the aforesaid disseisin.

Walter de Solers offers to the lord the King

OBLATIONS.

III. Miscellaneous Fines.

8. For Seisin.—cont.

10 marks and one palfrey, to have seisin of one mill in Rumney, whereof his father was disseised by will of King Henry, it being first ascertained by an inquisition whether he was so disseised or not.

Mathew Gernet offers to the lord the King 40*s.* and one palfrey, to have seisin of two ox-gangs of land in Germestunelit, whereof he was disseised for the King's service, whilst he was earl of Moreton.

William Fitz Odo offers 10 marks to have seisin of one carrucate of land with appurtenances in Bamborough, whereof his father and his other ancestors were seised at the conquest of England, and which was seized into the King's hand after the death of the same Odo, because he was then in Scotland.

9. Fines for Acquittal.

Roger Pipard offers to the lord the King 200 marks to have the King's favor, and acquittal for his hostages and the hostages of Gilbert de Angulo; and Meiler Fitz Henry, justiciary of Ireland, is commanded to take from him good security therefor.

Ralph de Bradel offers the lord the King 40 marks and one palfrey, to have acquittal from the custody of the work of the castle of Grimsby. And the same Ralph rendered and quitted claim to the lord the King six ox-gangs of land, and seven acres of meadow, and sixteen acres of pasture, which were seised into the King's hand, because the men of Grimsby took oath that he held them by encroachment; he is, however, to retain possession of those churches which he was in like manner said to have held by encroachment. And the sheriff is commanded to seize the aforesaid six ox-gangs of land, and seven acres of meadow, and sixteen acres of pasture into the King's hand as his demesne, and to answer therefor at the exchequer.

OBLATIONS.

III. Miscellaneous Fines.

10. Fines of divers Kinds.

William Fitz Ailward offers to the lord the King 10 marks to have custody of the King's vivary, and to keep up the pond at his own proper cost, and to erect a mill there.

Alan Fitz Count offers to the lord the King three good greyhounds and one harier to have G. the hostage of Britanny, whom the abbot of Fescamp had in custody.

The monks of Burton offer to the lord the King 200 marks for the appointment of a fit pastor to their house without delay; and that in the meantime the abbey may be in their hands.

Warin the jailor offers 40*s.* for the custody of the gate of Lancaster, and of the prisoners, and for confirmation of his charter.

Robert Fitz Simon offers to the lord the King two hawks, to have the reasonable bargain which he made against Richard Fitz John and Johanna his wife in the King's court in London.

Eustace de Bailloll offers to the lord the King 200 marks of silver for not being in the service of the King beyond the sea, according to the King's command.

Walter Buistard offers to the lord the King 10 marks of silver to have the custody of the King's houses in Oxford, with their appurtenances, and to have the town of Boarstall, which is a member of Brill, to farm for £4 yearly, in the same manner as those who before had it to farm.

Elias, son of Aaron, a Jew, offers to the lord the King one mark of gold to have a writ to admonish Roger the constable for recovery of a debt which he owes him.

The men of Mansfield offer 15 marks to the King to have right of common pasture in the park of Clipstone, as they had it before that park was enclosed.

The men of Newcastle-upon-Tyne offer to the lord the King 40 marks and two palfreys on occasion of his happy arrival. They paid them into the exchequer at Alnwic, and are acquitted.

Robert de Muschamp offers to the lord the King 10 marks for a licence to remain and not go abroad.

The knights of the honor of Berkhampstead offer to the lord the King 60 marks to have a licence not to go abroad.

The bishop of Norwich offers to the lord the King two palfreys for a certain crane on the day of St. Hilary at Saumur.

Alan de Galweye gives to the lord the King one good hound for two geese which the King gave to him at Windsor on the Wednesday next after the Ascension of our Lord.

Thomas de Tanestern offers 40 marks to have seisin of the land whereof he was disseised on account of his being convicted of a false oath, and to have peace thereof.

Thomas, the clerk of the chamber, offers two palfreys for Robert the chaplain, that the King will pardon the said Robert the illwill he entertained against him, because he ate with the aforesaid Thomas at Corffe.

R. earl of Chester gives to the lord the King one good palfrey for one lamprey which the lord the King gave to him.

Walter Fortin and Robert Hardwin pay 50 marks because they bought wine at too high a price for the King.

Master Honorius, archdeacon of Richmond, offers one palfrey for the arresting certain excommunicated persons.

William de Braouse offers ten bulls and ten cows not to be obliged to go into Scotland to conduct the King of Scotland to the lord the King.

Lawrence de Buccour of Bristol gives £100 to be delivered from the prison in which he is detained, and to have the King's grace, and that he may be delivered to Hugh de Neville that he may answer for that money.

The men of Laxton offer to the lord the King £100 to have his peace, and that their houses may not be burnt.

'Hugh de Malebiss offers 200 marks and two palfreys to have the King's benevolence, and to have seisin of his lands whereof he was disseised by the King's order, and that he may have his imparlances and pleas in the same manner in which they were before the King was angry with him.

The earl of Clare offers one palfrey to have a market at Rowell as he was accustomed before it was amoved by the preaching of the abbot of Flay.[1]

'[1] This entry corroborates a statement of Hoveden, who observes, "Eodem anno (1201) Eustachius abbas de Flay rediit in Angliam, et, prædicans in eâ verbum Dei de civitate in civitatem et de loco in locum, prohibuit nequis forum rerum venalium in diebus Dominicis exerceret. Dicebat enim quòd hoc mandatum subscriptum de observatione diei Dominicæ venit de cœlo." Hoveden gives this pretended epistle, which the abbot asserts he found upon the altar of St. Simon at Jerusalem.

The preceding examples will sufficiently explain the nature of the entries on the Fine Rolls, and, if their historical importance be deemed inferior to those occurring on the Close and Patent Rolls, yet they afford considerable insight into the manners, customs, laws, and government of the kingdom, and form a valuable addition to the authentic materials previously published under the direction of the Commissioners of Public Records for a general and local history of England. Conclusion.
